

NEPA Trans Health Conference Donor Information Guide

The NEPA Trans Health Conference was conceived in 2012 as an educational forum for Northeastern Pennsylvania (NEPA) area health care professionals, their staffs, educators, and others to learn from the transgender community and from those who treat and support them about the necessary care, respect, and understanding of people who are transgender.

The primary goal of the conference is to overcome provider knowledge gaps and to reduce the psychological harm and medical neglect that is done to transgender people when their lived experience and the professional consensus that directs their care and treatment is not well understood by care providers and others.

Organized entirely by volunteers from the transgender community and their families, medical students from the Geisinger Commonwealth School of Medicine, behavioral health professionals, physicians, and educators, the conference represents the best in campus and community partnerships for improving health care by learning from and with the communities served how best to meet their needs.

The unique features of the NEPA Trans Health Conference include its community driven collaborative nature and its integration into the med school curriculum as required learning, which brings together each new class of first year students with transgender and nonbinary people, their loved ones and allies, and all the varying types of providers and professionals who provide their care and support. Each year, 100+ students are brought together with 100 to 200 or more people of trans experience, care professionals, allies and others in a respectful and informative space to learn about caring as a community-based experience.

The conference is free to attend and is supported by in-kind donations to cover venue and tech services and by cash donations to cover expenses. Donors include any individual or organization interested in supporting the transgender community, medical education, and/or the conference as a diversity education event.
